About Me

Hi all!

My name is Annie Martino, I am going into my junior year in high school and am serving my first ever term as state officer, and third year in F.B.L.A. I'm tenacious and an outgoing person, who is always looking to help others, and appreciates F.B.L.A. for its positive community, and making an investment in young adults' futures. F.B.L.A. is a safe space for us to be ourselves and discover qualities within ourselves that help shape who we want to become.

As someone who has had close friendships as well as family members who have either had severe suicidal ideation or have taken their own life, I understand that suicide is an ongoing issue in society today, and holds different stories and connections with each person. These vast feelings and stories are what made me decide to look at a micro perspective of suicide awareness, by focusing on teenage suicide awareness.

Introduction Why this Topic?

Suicide is an ongoing issue in society today, and holds different stories and connections with each person. I have had close friendships as well as family members who have either had severe suicidal ideation or have taken their own life, while also seeing a close friend and fellow F.B.L.A. member experience the same trauma. With compassion and unity, Never Too Late focuses on teenage suicide awareness, and what we can do as Future Business Leaders of America to recognize the signs and help through educational courses on suicide, listening to seminars that address suicide as well as other mental health issues that are applicable among teenagers, participating in public suicide awareness events, and more.
